

Robert M. Zewig, M.D. Memorial Award

As a physician in family practice in Riverside, Dr. Robert Zweig saw firsthand the impact of air pollution on his patients health, particularly on children. Driven by concern for their health, he dedicated himself to eradicating smog and to the pursuit of hydrogen power as a clean fuel alternative to improve air quality. Before his passing in 2002, Dr. Zweig was a noted author on the use of hydrogen fuel and fuel cell technology. He was also the co-founder of the anti-pollution groups Clean Air Now and the Clean Air Institute.

The AQMD Board established the Robert M. Zewig, M.D. Memorial Award to recognize the contributions of physicians who are deeply committed to reducing the impacts of air pollution to public health.
